Abstract: The upper atmospheres of the planets and their satellites are more directly exposed to sunlight and solar wind particles than the surface or the deeper atmospheric layers. At the altitudes where the associated energy is deposited, the atmospheres may become ionized and are referred to as ionospheres.

The modification of the atmospheres and ionospheres of ringed planets by the injection of ionized and neutral material from the rings is discussed, on the basis of Pioneer and Voyager observations.

atmospheres and ionospheres of these planets. Venus and Mars are now known to be non-magnetic planets and in this paper a brief description of the ionosphere and atmosphere of Venus as evolved through several planetary missions, particularly the Pioneer Venus Orbiter which had onboard several aeronomy experiments, has been given.

This book is an attempt at summarizing our present understanding of the atmospheres and ionospheres in the outer solar system, with particular emphasis on the relevant physics and chemistry. I was motivated to prepare this manuscript for the following reasons.

the atmospheres may become ionized and are referred to as ionospheres. The details of the photon and particle interactions with the upper atmosphere depend strongly on whether the object has an intrinsic magnetic field that may channel the precipitating particles into the atmosphere or drive the atmospheric gas out to space.
